VOL. XVIII. NO. 37

WRANGELL, ALASKA, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1919

PRICE TEN CENTS

STEAMSHIP RATES TO BE GREATLY INCREASED

If Water Transportation Is Placed in Hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission

Says Lawyer for the Alaska Steamship Co. in Attempting to Bluff House Committee.

WASHINGTON — Alaskan steamship rates will be greatly increased if water transportation is placed under the regulation and jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission as proposed in the Esch-Pomerene bill for railroad regulation, so Frank A. Law, counsel for the Alaska S. S. company told the House Interstate Commerce Committee. A communication from Governor Riggs favoring the Esch-Pomerene bill was read into the Record. The Governor said that the control of water traffic should be under one agency.

CABLE NEWS

WASHINGTON — For the first time since the middle of 1918, the administration is able to show a net gain in the operation of railroads.

WASHINGTON — A round table conference between capital and labor will be held at the White House between October 5 and 10. It was announced today that 40 will be invited by President Wilson to attend the meeting.

SEATTLE — Forty-eight warships were reviewed by Secretary Daniels at San Francisco last Monday. They will be reviewed in the Seattle harbor by President Wilson.

BERLIN — The first contingent of German prisoners have arrived at Cologne and Dentz from the British camp at Calais.

WELLINGTON, New Zealand — The peace treaty with Germany was unanimously ratified by Parliament after members of the Labor party had criticized parts of it.

BERNE — After being completely surrounded by forces, the Russian Bolsheviks have proposed peace negotiations to the Lithuanians.

SEATTLE — Because her puppy annoyed his chickens Frederick Britz, aged 67 stabbed Mrs. Lena Schmidt, aged 48, to death using two knives. Both parties are Germans. They lived in adjoining houses on the same lot.

WASHINGTON — Declaring that the real purpose of the Foreign Relations Committee Majority in amending the peace treaty was to kill the treaty entirely

Two Excursions to Petersburg

Excursions to Petersburg are becoming popular diversions. Last Saturday 35 Wrangellites, mostly young people, went to Petersburg on the popular Hazel B No. 4 to attend a dance. They returned Sunday afternoon.

Yesterday afternoon another party of about 50 persons requisitioned the Hazel B No. 4 for a trip to Petersburg to attend the Chataqua. Following the entertainment there was a dance. The Hazel B No. 4 returned early this forenoon.

and that such course would be suicidal to the United States, Senator Hitchcock asserted in his Senate speech that majority senators never would accept any of the committee changes. The treaty opponents, he said, "crawl on the ground with microscopes searching for a pitfall in the League of Nations and overlook the substantial benefits which the treaty would bring the nation."

WASHINGTON — The king and queen of Belgium will arrive in Washington in October. They will be the guests of President Wilson at the White House, remaining for three days.

COLUMBUS — This morning 5 aeroplanes left for Newark, Ohio where the presidential train will be met and escorted to the state capital.

WASHINGTON — The War Department's plan for universal training as contained in the department's bill for the reorganization of the army on a peace time basis, would not interfere with the education or farm work of young men becoming eligible for service, March told the House Military Committee.

WASHINGTON — The Senate has passed a bill to make possible the leasing of public lands having deposits of coal, oil, gas, phosphate and sodium.

PARIS — The Austrian delegation has asked the peace conference to extend the time allowed for an answer to terms of peace by two days.

LONDON — A bomb was thrown at the Premier of Egypt at Alexandria. The bomb was concealed in a basket of grapes but did not injure the premier. The assailant was a theological student.

ST. PAUL — Resolutions and demands for punishment for profiteering as a felony and barring alien slackers and conscientious objectors from homestead rights were adopted today by the Minnesota convention of the American Legion.

Rev. and Mrs. Clark are preparing to leave Wrangell in the near future.

Bert McKay has bought the building on Front street formerly occupied by Dr. Shurick's office and drug store. The purchase price was $1100.

Charles Benjamin's store is one of the latest business buildings to have a new coat of paint.

No Need for Disarmament. Some enthusiastic reformer has suggested disarming the farmers of their shotguns and squirrel rifles. Our observation and experience is that the farmer's gun rarely goes off accidentally, and a good citizen is as safe from it as he is from the Constitution of the United States.—Ohio Farmer.

The Wrangell Public school opened Tuesday morning with an enrollment of 81 pupils.

Fred Becker Laid to Rest at Ketchikan

The funeral services over the remains of the late Clarence F. Becker, who was accidentally killed at the Karheen Packing company plant at Craig last Thursday, were solemnized at the M. E. Church in Ketchikan at 2 o'clock this afternoon, the Rev. F. R. Falconer officiating.

Clarence F. Becker was 27 years of age, being born in Seattle May 31, 1892. He was married in 1913 to Miss Margaret Reid, and was blessed with three children, Carl, a son aged 5, born in Seattle, Frederick, a son of three years, and Jack, a baby of 11 months, born at Craig.

The deceased was a mechanic, having served his apprenticeship with his father in a machine shop at Anacortes, Washington, and later at the Acme Iron Works at Seattle. At the time of his death he was associated with his father, C. G. Becker, and his brother, D. S. Becker, in their machine shop at Craig. The deceased was well known throughout the vicinity of Craig as being a first class machinist. Last Thursday he was called by the Karheen Packing company to assist them with work at their plant, when the accident occurred. Mr. Becker was not only popular among his co-workers, but with citizens as well. He was secretary of the Commercial Club at Craig, secretary of the Loyal Order of Moose, and the representative of Alaska Labor Union No. 5. After the services at the church, the remains were taken to the local cemetery for interment.—Times.

Charles Becker in Wrangell This Week

Charles Becker arrived from Hood Bay Tuesday where he has been employed as a machinist during the past season. After the death of his son, Mr. Becker felt that his presence was needed at Craig. He obtained a release from his engagement with the Hidden Inlet Canning company. He is now en route home, and will leave on the Glenora tonight for Craig.

Last week Mr. Becker made a trip to Ketchikan to attend the funeral of his son, Clarence Frederick. Mr. Becker states that his son's widow and her three small children will make their home in Craig for the present. Before her marriage in 1913 Mrs. Fred Becker was Miss Margaret Reid. She was born and raised in Scotland. She and Fred Becker first met in Vancouver, B. C., where she was visiting her cousin who is a member of the firm of T. G. McBride & company, dealers in building materials.

Mr. Becker stated that the Craig Machine works will continue in business, being operated by himself and son, Daniel.

The tragic death of Fred Becker came as a great shock to the people of the West Coast. Being an unusually handsome young man, and in the pride of his strength, with the glow of health in his cheeks, his very presence breathed such a life current that we can scarcely realize that he is gone. There is something in the death of a young man with a young family that softens the heart and fills us with sympathy for the afflicted as does no other bereavement that falls to the lot of man. The old expect to be taken. Nature prepares them for the change, and we find some comfort in the idea that they had lived their allotted time, and tasted of all the joys of life, but our hearts are especially tender

THREE NEW BUILDINGS GOING UP

A Business House, a Residence and a Municipal Shed

Arnt Sorset is erecting a two-story building on Front street opposite the Uhler block. The building is 40x80 feet at the base, while the upper story is 24x40 feet. Mr. Sorset will open a meat market in the new building as soon as it is completed.

Samuel Cunningham is building a new residence on the vacant lot adjoining his present residence on McKinnon avenue. The building is 34x46 feet with eight rooms and a basement. There will also be porches in the front and rear, and the building will be somewhat on the bungalow style. Mr. Cunningham will move his family into the new residence as soon as it is completed.

A special meeting of the town council was held on Tuesday evening of last week. In the absence of the mayor, F. E. Gingrass acted as chairman of the meeting. The meeting was called for the purpose of considering bids for the erection of a town warehouse. The bid of Charles Nelson was considered the best bid and he was awarded the contract for erecting a building 20' x 30'. Mr. Nelson at once began work on the new building.

Had Not Seen Him in Twenty Years

One day this week Earl West heard some one rapping. When he opened the door of his cottage he stood facing a stranger, but the visitor did not long remain a stranger. Earl looked him over for a moment and then said: "Hello, Guy! What are you doing up in this country?" The visitor was G. E. Craig, a boyhood friend of Mr. West, whom he had not seen in 20 years. Mr. Craig is district manager of the marine department of the Fairbanks-Morse company. His headquarters are at Seattle.

Steve Ragan has been ordered to Juneau on the next boat to act as prosecuting attorney for that district at the coming term of court, as the office there is still vacant. He recently returned from a 15 days' vacation.—Ketchikan Chronicle.

towards the young father or mother. Their passing, with babes left behind too little to comprehend the meaning of it all, seems like a violation of the scheme of life.

Fred Becker had a wonderfully well rounded life for a man of 27 years. He was a skilled mechanic, a successful business man, a useful citizen, a dutiful son, an affectionate husband, and a kind and loving father.

How true are the words of Longfellow: "We see but dimly through the mists and vapors."

But may we not comfort grieving hearts with the words of Faber:

"For the love of God is broader than the measure of man's mind, And the heart of the Eternal is most wonderfully kind."

THE FUR MARKET

ST. LOUIS—The strong demand for furs of practically all kinds that has prevailed quite steadily since spring still continues. The available stocks, particularly of the American staples, are probably the smallest ever known in the history of the trade.

The Russian government recently placed certain restrictions on the shipment of furs out of Russia, which will naturally curtail the quantities expected from that source.

Now that peace is practically declared and the embargo on shipments to Germany and her allies lifted, a new source of demand may be expected from those quarters, and as the principal supply will be in this market, there is reason to expect liberal orders from that part of Europe which has been closed to our supply for the past five years.

This year there has been some complaint on the part of shippers of raw furs regarding slow returns. In very few cases has this been the fault of the fur house, but due to slow traffic conditions. If any shipper of raw furs finds that returns are not being made promptly after the furs are actually received he should consign his future shipments to some other house. The majority of the fur houses are prompt in making returns because they realize that that is the only way in which they can keep the trapper satisfied and receive his future shipments.

Name of Local Citizen Becoming Known Outside

The 1919 edition of "Who's Who" contains a brief, crisp, personal sketch of a well known citizen of Wrangell.

"Who's Who" is a biographical dictionary of notable living men and women. It contains the name of every living American whose position or achievements make his personality of general interest, and tells just the things every intelligent person wants to know about those who are most conspicuous in every walk of life. In the pages of "Who's Who" is mirrored the national life in all its phases. An attentive reading of the life sketches of this volume discloses many extraordinary examples of industry, many deeds of noble and beneficent achievement, which are overlooked in cursory reading, but which, nevertheless are full of valuable suggestions for the thoughtful mind.

The Wrangell citizen whose name and biography appears in this standard volume of reference is none other than Rev. H. P. Corser, rector of St. Philip's Church, and author of Totem Lore. The only other citizen of Alaska whose name appears in "Who's Who" is Governor Thos. Riggs, Jr.

This week we learned that Mr. Corser's fame has spread beyond the pages of "Who's Who" and his name will probably soon appear on the roster of one of the most notable organizations in America.

On Tuesday Mr. Corser received an invitation to join the Authors' League of America, Inc., of which Rex Beach is president, and Booth Tarkington, vice president. Among the members of the executive council are such notable authors as Winston Churchill, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Ida M. Tarbell, George Barr McCutcheon, Upton Sinclair, Gertrude Atherton, Charles Dana Gibson, Rupert Hughes and George Ade.

LABOR DAY IS FITTINGLY OBSERVED

General Holiday and a Dance at Redmen's Hall at Night

Labor Day was appropriately observed in Wrangell by a dance given by the local branch of the Alaska Labor Union in the Redmen's hall Monday evening. It was the largest attended dance that has taken place in Wrangell in months, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. The music was furnished by the famous North Star orchestra. This is the first social function that has been given by the Wrangell Labor Union since it was instituted four months ago, and the organization is to be congratulated upon its success. In the future the social events of the labor union will be looked forward to with keenest anticipation.

LINDMAN HOME AGAIN

Returns From Juneau With a Remarkable Geological Collection

Councilman E. A. Lindman returned on the Jefferson Saturday from a trip to Juneau. It was not business that took Mr. Lindman away, and it was anything but pleasure. Last month he was hurried to Juneau in a speed boat to be operated on for appendicitis. The surgeon decided that his appendix needed some attention, but that that was not the principal cause of his suffering. After two or three incisions were made it was possible to open a door to the interior department of his anatomy. It was then found that the rock pile inside the patient had become so large that he was not equal to the agonizing task of carrying it around any longer. Two hundred and fifty-nine gall stones (some of them boulders) were removed. After the operation the nurse said that she then understood why the surgeon had hesitated before beginning the operation—he was simply trying to make up his mind whether to cut or to blast.

Pedro Rodriguez Dies

Pedro Rodriguez, a Mexican, aged 44 years, passed away last Friday afternoon, after a prolonged illness. Mr. Rodriguez came to Alaska from Zacatecas, Mexico, in 1908. He worked for a time in Ketchikan and Loring. In 1914 he came to Wrangell where he lived until his death. He was a quiet, peaceable man, and earned his living by honest labor. During the last few months of his life he was unable to work. About a month ago his funds became exhausted. As soon as this fact was learned by the Spanish speaking people of this locality they raised a fund for his relief. Medical attention and care was provided for him as long as he was alive, and after his death the remains were given a Christian burial. The majority of the Spanish-speaking people employed by the local canneries are not Mexicans and were never in Mexico, but the tie of language in a foreign country is stronger than people generally realize.

How the Doughboy Likes "Furrin" Travel

Your cosmopolitan doughboy has shaken hands with the King of England, danced with the Princess of Roumania, learned the slang of a dozen nations and cocked a knowing eye at all the choicest sights of the Continent, may sound extremely sophisticated by cable, but wait until he strikes the United States and see what furrin travel has done for him! It has made him love not Europe less, but home more, and he hardly tries to conceal his grand passion under a poker face, either. For he has been homesick and weary for many months, and the Goddess of Liberty looks like an angel, and New York harbor like heaven, to his fond eyes.

As a national asset, then, the soldier is perhaps our best citizen, and because the A. E. F. as a whole is rampantly enthusiastic about its homeland and her interests, America may look to her soldiers for real inspiration in citizenship. These are the men to put into your business life, as rapidly as they can be transplanted from army to civil jobs.

To make the transposition more simple and effective, the War department through Col. Arthur Woods, Assistant to the Secretary of War, has set up the wheels of a giant machine, which is working night and day to co-operate with all employment agencies for the sake of the returned soldier who has no job. But more than that, this great employment system operates for the good of America. Col. Woods and his thousands of assisting committees believe in the doughboy and in his power of real achievement in the future national life of the United States.—Ex.

Bushrod was establishing a pigeon coop of his own, emulating his neighbor, Bill Hite. In arranging the financial promotion of this venture he went to his mother.

"Mother," he said, "I want a dollar to buy a pigeon."

Mother thought a dollar a rather high price for a pigeon, with common-birds averaging ten cents.

"But, mother," Bushrod said, earnestly, "you don't understand. This is a pedigreed pigeon. With its pedigree it's cheap at a dollar."

Bushrod finally wheedled his mother out of the dollar and left to buy his blooded bird. He returned with the pigeon and a scrap of crumpled paper in his pocket.

"Mother," he said, "this is the pedigree."

"On the crumpled scrap of paper was written:

"Grandfather unknown. Grandmother, unknown. Father, unknown. Mother, Bill Hite's pigeon."

Constitution Day To Be Observed In Wrangell

Seventeenth of September

General Movement Throughout the Nation to Observe the Day in Such a Manner as to increase Popular Knowledge Concerning American Ideals of Government.

The following communication has been received by the principal of Wrangell Public schools:

Office of
Commissioner of Education
Juneau, Alaska

August 31, 1919.

Miss M. Crosno,
Principal Wrangell Public Schools,

Wrangell, Alaska

Dear Madam:

This office has recommended and Governor Riggs has approved the celebration of September 17th as Constitution Day in the schools of Alaska. This action has been taken in line with the general movement throughout the nation to observe the day in schools and communities generally in such a manner as to increase popular knowledge concerning American ideals of government and with the further object of bringing about a better popular understanding of the Constitution.

Eight national organizations are standing as sponsors of a general movement to make September 17, 1919, a day of particular interest to the people of the nation. They are as follows:

National Security League,
Sons of the American Revolution,
American Defense Society,
American Rights League,
Boy Scouts of America,
National Association for Constitutional Government,
National Society Daughters of the American Revolution.

I am, therefore, requesting that September 17th be celebrated as Constitution Day in all the schools of Alaska.

The plan for the celebration of Constitution Day will naturally vary in the different schools. I would suggest that a general program be prepared by the school and that the same be given either in the afternoon or evening, the general public being invited. An evening program is perhaps preferable. In smaller communities this program can be given in the schoolhouse. In large communities where there is no auditorium in connection with the school, some downtown hall should be secured for the evening.

The program referred to can be divided into two parts, one being given by the school and the other by some individual in the community. The school should contribute patriotic songs, recitations, etc. A speaker should be secured to outline in a 30-minute address some of the salient facts regarding the preparation and adoption of the Constitution, its importance to us as a nation, and its function as an interpreter of American ideals.

The successful celebration of this birthday of the Constitution is dependent upon the school executives and teachers in the various districts, as no agency in Alaska other than the public schools is assuming responsibility for the matter. There will, I am sure, be no lack of support on the part of the school board, and of the residents of Wrangell generally.

I shall much appreciate receiving a copy of the program which your school presents.

Very sincerely yours,
LESTER D. HENDERSON,
Commissioner of Education.

Miss Crosno is already taking steps to comply with the request of the Commissioner of Education. Further announcement of the observance will be made in our issue of September 11.

The Sign of the Purple Parrot

By Hilda Morris

(Copyright, 1917, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Clarita Evans had always loved birds, ever since her childhood on the farm. She used to spend long hours alone in the woods, watching them and trying to imitate their calls. Later, some one gave her a bird book, and she learned to know their scientific names. When she went to college she took a course in ornithology, which she enjoyed more than any other part of her work. So when her father died suddenly, at the end of her sophomore year, leaving her with no relatives and only a little money, she resolved to start a bird store in the city.

Clarita had ideas. A number of her friends had started gift shops and tea rooms which were more or less "artistic." Clarita visited all such shops that she could find, noting their clever decorations.

"I don't see why a bird store can't be as attractive as any sort of gift shop," she argued. "Mine shall be, so that all the old ladies in town will want to give canaries to their grandchildren for Christmas."

It proved to be an attractive shop, as "different" as the most modern decorator could wish. After all there is nothing more decorative than birds, with their bright colors—or else why should we so often see them drawn and painted? Clarita's real birds, arranged among green plants, hung against gray walls, in quaint Japanese cages, furnished all the decoration one could wish. The dove-gray sparrows with rose-colored bills hung in the window, and an artist friend of Clarita's painted a gay wooden shingle with these words: "The Sign of the Purple Parrot."

The shop succeeded, of course. People always come to stores that look new and clever and attractive—especially when they are presided over by pretty auburn-haired girls like Clarita. Her voice was as sweet as any of her birds' notes, and her own bright coloring and fresh gowns quite as decorative—though in a different way. People did buy birds for Christmas, and most of them were as well satisfied with themselves for having encouraged the enterprise of such a nice girl as they were with their purchases. They even bought birds after Christmas.

"How's Dick?" He Would Ask.

Then in the spring Clarita had a new idea. What would the many people who were going away on trips or to hotels do with their birds? She got her artist friend to letter a sign for the window that read, "Birds Boarded." It was surprising how many birds wished to find summer quarters. A number of Clarita's former feathered pets came back to lodge and the little shop was filled with song and color and soft flutterings.

One June day a little old lady came into the shop, followed by a tall young man who appeared to be her son. He was a very tall man, quite unnecessarily tall for one so handsome to begin with, but he seemed to be rather embarrassed by the large gilded birdcage he was carrying. Possibly men do not like to carry bird cages through the streets.

The cage contained a pair of fine canaries, and they had come to board. The young man set them down, with a sigh of relief, and looked at Clarita, while his mother made arrangements for their care, giving the girl all sorts of careful directions.

"You see," she explained, "I'm going away for the summer, and my son is too busy, even if he'd remember to feed them, and I don't believe he would. I hate to leave them. I wonder—I wonder if you'd write me now and then, just to let me know they're all right?"

Clarita smiled amusedly. She would, of course. What was the address? Mrs. James Tucker—

The young man broke in, evidently embarrassed.

"Oh, I say, now, mother, you can't ask the young lady to do that. I'll let you know about the birds—I'll drop in once a week or so to see how they are. I'm more familiar with them, anyway, it would be much better."

"Well, perhaps—" agreed the old lady. She nodded to Clarita. "You're very kind," she said. "And please don't forget that cuttle-fish bone; fresh every three days. Very well. Good-morning!"

"Wasn't that a nice girl?" said Mrs. Tucker to her son, as they walked down the street. "I'm sure she'll be good to Dick and Nellie."

"I hope they'll be good to her," murmured the young man. "I should think any bird could sing in that shop."

Mrs. Tucker's anxieties concerning her pets must have multiplied as the summer went on, for Mr. James Tucker, Jr., found it necessary to drop in and look at the birds very frequently indeed. Clarita used to smile when she saw him coming. Mr. James, Jr., was a young lawyer, and his office not yet being overrun with clients, he found time to visit the bird store in the middle of the morning or the afternoon, or sometimes both. Birds were never better looked-after than were the Tucker canaries.

"How's Dick?" he would ask, coming in, to find Clarita polishing cages or filling tiny cups with bird-seed.

"Very well," Clarita would answer, most demurely. "He's been singing his head off this morning."

"Nothing strange in that," he would say. "I should, too, if I stayed here. Isn't there something I can do to help, Miss Evans? I've an hour or so to spare. Let me polish that brass; I'm used to shining up gear on my auto. I wish you could take a little spin in it tonight, after the birds are all asleep. Would you—?"

Then there came a day when Dick was not so well. He drooped and pined in his cage, with never a song. Clarita fussed over him, and doctored him for various bird ailments. But it was of no avail—Dick refused to be merry.

"Of course, he's a very old bird," Clarita said anxiously to James, who was very attentive to the invalid. "It's probably old age. I don't think there's much we can do. What a shame that your mother, shouldn't see him again!"

"I might telegraph," he suggested, "but she's five hundred miles away. I doubt whether she'd come. She will be sorry, though. She's really fond of that poor old bird."

"Of course she is!" Clarita said with emphasis. "When you do like birds, you love them. You don't understand, James Tucker; you needn't laugh!"

"Well, I love something else besides birds," he defended. "That is I love somebody else. It's all right to want to spend your life with birds, but I'd rather spend mine with—"

Something in his tone made Clarita turn away quickly. A customer came in just then, and she was busy for an hour or more, so his sentence was not finished. However, Clarita knew what its ending would have been, and she pondered it that night as she sat alone at her window, looking out at the stars. She pondered it, and a little soft sigh escaped her. She was very happy.

Bird Dick died the next day. James came in, to find Clarita putting his soft little body into a moss-lined box.

"Poor old Dick!" said James Tucker. "Mother'll care a lot. We ought to make it up to her somehow. I might buy her another bird, but no bird could take Dick's place in her affections. I think the very best way would be to make her so happy about something else that she would be distracted. I know what I'd like to do."

"What?" asked Clarita—although she thought she knew.

"Take her a new daughter," said James Tucker. "What do you say, Clarita? Couldn't we be married now and break the news about Dick together? It would make her so happy she couldn't grieve for him at all. Mother's always wanted a daughter, Clarita, and you know that I love you more than anything in the wide world. Couldn't we be married now, Clarita?"

"Well," murmured Clarita, as his arm began to steal around her, "I don't know but what we could."

The Slouchy Man.

A slouchy young man is not only to be criticized for his outside habit, the way he walks, talks and dresses, but for the inside habit which these things imply, observes the Ohio State Journal. A slouchy man is slouchy inside as well as outside. His mind is slouchy, his thinking lags, his ambitions droop. Anyone can tell him on the streets. He swaggers along, lolls about and dresses like a scarecrow. The fashions are slouchy and he revels in them. You cannot expect much of such a man. His spirit drifts and lounges along as if to be orderly and proper was a sin. Such young men are poor timber for citizenship.

Thoughtful Parent.

Time, 2:30 a. m. A darkened chamber; night lamp dimly burning. A fretful cry, followed by soothing words from the young mother. Anon the plaintive wail, accompanied by a choking gulp. Again the mother's voice, in a higher pitch and imperative tone: "Aisy, dear, get me a wee pinch of sugar; the little darling has the hic-cups."

The father of a fortnight (anxious-ly)—"Gracious goodness, Gladys! Don't think of giving her sweets. Why, you'll ruin her teeth before she's a month old."

ARE YOU? GUILTY?

A FARMER carrying an express package from a big mail-order house was accosted by a local dealer.

"Why didn't you buy that bill of goods from me? I could have saved you the express, and besides you would have been patronizing a home store, which helps pay the taxes and builds up this locality."

The farmer looked at the merchant a moment and then said: "If you don't patronize your home paper and advertise? I read it and didn't know that you had the stuff I have here."

DUCKS

Among the passengers on the City of Seattle Tuesday was Dr. B. Buckley, supreme grand physician for the Knights of Columbus. Dr. Buckley is a resident of St. Paul. He recently returned from France where he was in charge of K. C. work during the war. The Doctor is a great bird hunter, ducks being his specialty. After leaving Ketchikan the Doctor said to Jerry Galvin "I have heard that Alaska has a few ducks but I have not seen one since leaving Seattle. Did you ever see any ducks in Alaska?" "Ducks," said Galvin, "Why man there are more ducks on the flats at the mouth of the Stikine river near Wrangell than in the whole State of Minnesota." When the steamer arrived at Wrangell the Doctor called out: "Say, Galvin, where are all those ducks you were telling us about?"

The Doctor left the steamer to see the totems, and while he was about town Mr. Galvin went to C. M. Coulter and purchased several ducks and then stole into the Doctor's stateroom and hung the ducks around in such a manner as to produce a decorative effect. The Doctor did not visit his stateroom before the steamer sailed, but it is a safe bet that he had a good dinner that evening.

A Week's Outing on the Stikine

The Sentinel family spent last week on the Stikine in company with Captain K. Johansen who is fishing on the river. It is doubtful if there is another stream on the American continent that is the equal of the Stikine in scenic grandeur. Some day the scenery of the Stikine will be capitalized the same as the lakes of Italy or the mountains of Switzerland. The time is sure to come when a trip up the Stikine will be advertised throughout the United States and Canada as the most scenic river on the continent. And it would not require much advertising to put the Stikine on the map, because every person who makes the trip to Telegraph Creek becomes an enthusiastic booster for the Stikine. The party of eastern people who went into the Cassiar two weeks ago were all people who had decided to make the trip after talking with W. N. Beach of New York and others who were in the Cassiar last year.

There are many delightful places along the river which are ideal for camping. There is little left to be desired for an outing which affords hunting, fishing, mountain climbing, boating, all in the healthful atmosphere of a mountain stream. And one does not feel isolated on the Stikine, especially after the genial purser on the Hazel B No. 4 has tossed him a bundle containing mail from the latest steamer from Seattle.

We Wrangell people have gotten into the habit of speaking of the "sloughs" along the Stikine. Anyone coming from east of the Mississippi is apt to think of a "slough" as being a stretch of deep mud or mire to be avoided, but many of the so-called "sloughs" along the Stikine are quiet little inlets where the water is as smooth as glass, and so clear as to make the reflections of snow and mountains bewildering in their beauty. It is these "sloughs" that make a row boat or an "egg beater" indispensable for an outing on the Stikine.

We have mentioned only the scenic grandeur of the Stikine, but the Stikine of the future will be something more than a scenic route. There are thousands of acres of the most fertile land along the river valley where sooner or later many happy homes will be located.

Dorothy and Helen Gould, whose home is at Craig, are in Ketchikan, where they will attend high school this winter. They are staying with their aunt, Mrs. R. L. Petty.—Times.
